To the east of my house, there lives an old woman. She has become rich in the past three to five years. I used to ridicule the poor woman, but now she sneers at me. I sneered at her first, and it's her turn now. We keep ridiculing each other. This unending exchange of ridicule is a cycle of agony. Dhyana can be found everywhere, it has profound meaning, it is as pure as spring water, it makes all equal.
